

We Can Help!

If you find yourself in one or more of these situations:

- You're struggling with your child's challenging behavior in their natural environment (home, child care, etc.)
- Your child is demonstrating challenging behavior in social settings with peers (excessive hitting, biting, temper tantrums, etc.)
- A friend, teacher or other trusted adult has expressed concerns about your child's social, emotional, or physical development.
- Your child shows aggression towards others.
- Your child's refusal to comply with verbal requests and/or nonverbal prompts is causing disruption among family members.
- Your child's behaviors is negatively impacting your family's overall quality of life (family vacations, community outings, daily routines, faith based activities).
- Your child experienced a major loss or change in family dynamics (death, divorce, relocation, etc.) or perhaps a traumatic event and is not adjusting well.
- You're struggling to meet the needs or behaviors of your child who is living with a developmental disability.
